MEMORIAL FOR A BLIND KING

Luxembourg is a tiny duchy nestled between Belgium and the Netherlands and was, in fact, a part of both at one time during the 18th and 19th centuries

It has two official languages - French and Letzeburgsch - the latter relegated to the inferior position of a local dialect until after World War II when Nationalism brought it out of hiding. However, Luxembourg or Letzeburg has an ancient and honorable history dating back to the early middle ages.

The House of Luxembourg gave Europe some of its history-making rulers such as John of Bohemia; Charles IV, who later became emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, and King Wenceslas. It was Charles IV who built the magnificent Charles University in Prague, and it was John who introduced the large silver coin known as Prague Groschen, Europe's earliest large silver piece.

The same King John also was, by reason of his birth, the ruler of Luxembourg, even though separated from it by a considerable distance. When the English went to war against France, John, as ruler of Luxembourg, was called upon to fulfill his duty as an ally. Since John was totally blind, no one expected him to do more than send troops and money. But John took his oath literally, insisting he could fight as well as anyone, and ordered his men to put him, fully armored on a horse and send him into the battle lines.

The battle was being joined near Crecy, in Picardie, in the year 1346. The day went badly for the French and they lost. Despite his confidence, King John fell in battle, respected as a hero by both sides.

1946 LUXEMBURG

100 Francs commemorating the 600th Anniversary of John The Blind.

Choice Uncirculated...$5.00

Eight-hundred years after the fateful event, one of his descendants, Prince Jean of Luxembourg, decided to issue a commemorative coin honoring the heroic King. This is a silver dollar size 100 Francs coin, showing the head of the Prince-Consort Jean (John) between the shields of France and Luxembourg and, in Letzeburgsch language, the words "Prince Jean of Luxembourg," and the value 100 Franken. On the reverse side, the armored

MEMORIAL FOR A BLIND KING

King John is pictured in the style of the broad silver Groats "with the cavalier" so popular during the 14th and 15th centuries. On a band, the Latin inscription - "I shall serve," and underneath the horse, the date, August 26, 1346-1946, can be seen. Around the attacking knight, the Letzeburgsch inscription translated means "John The Blind."

This is Luxembourg's first large silver coin since the very rare 5 Franc coins of the late 19th century which some consider only pattern issues.

THE LAST SCUDO

Anyone familiar with the opera
"Rigoletto" by Giuseppe Verdi, will remember that Rigoletto paid the hired assassin twenty Scudi to do away with the hated Duke of Mantua.

Coin collectors know the Scudo from their Italian or Papal series as a broad silver coin very much like the German Taler or English Crown. Actually, "Scudo" in Italian means shield. It is the same word as the French Ecu or the Spanish and Portuguese Escudo.

Originally, the "shield coin" was a gold piece of France, imitated by many Italian, Spanish and other mint masters
and reaching its zenith during the 13th Century. The French Ecu d'or was always a very thin, broad gold piece as distinguished from its contemporary the Ducat or Florin. It was lighter in weight than the Ducat and primarily intended for local use, whereas the Ducat and Florin was an international trade coin.

The design on the Ecu d'or differed on the obverse, with the ruler pictured either standing, seated, or on a horse;
but the reverse usually showed a shield
placed upon a richly ornamented cross,
and it is from this shield or badge that the name Ecu d'or is derived. There is also the significance that the Royal shield assures a good coin.

The first silver Ecu of France meant to replace the gold Ecu, although in practice the silver soon became worth less than its gold counterpart.

In Italy and the pyrreneic peninsular, the Escudo or Scudo at first represented the same value as a silver 8 Reales or Taler. In practice, again, it did not quite work out that way. But the silver coin was on its way and by the 17th Century had become the main coin of Europe. The gold Ecu or Scudo soon took a secondary position next to the Ducat and gradually faded out of existence.

The magnificent silver Scudi of Florence, Pisa, Venice, the Popes, Milan and most Italian city-states,
and principalities, gave artists a chance to display their talents. The larger Flan gave them more room to design beautiful types, something the small gold coin had not permitted.

Papal Scudi, both in silver and gold--
and again worth exactly the same --

PORTUGAL

(República Portuguesa)

1 Escudo 1910, Liberty in flag,

Shield over globe. Commemorating Decree of January 1954.

Brill. Uncirculated.. $3.75

was issued until 1866 when the Vatican joined the Italian Lire system of currency.

Spain had abandoned the Escudo and Reales system in favor of a decimal one at about the same time, and in Portugal, the Reis and Milreis was the money of the day. But strangely enough in 1910, Portugal abandoned its somewhat inflated Reis system and returned to the ancient denomination called the Escudo. Thus we have again the large silver coin called Escudo, showing on one side the head of the king, and a little later, of the Republic; and on the reverse the shield of Portugal. The monetary idea had come full circle.

COINS OF GRACE'S RAINIER

It seems a little odd that so personable and ordinary a person as Grace Kelly's husband should appear rather stiffly on the coins of his tiny principality, but Monaco is a real state and has jealously guarded its monetary rights for centuries.

It would be much cheaper simply to use French money rather than issue a complete series of special design. But Monaco does not wish to lose its independent and tax-free status.

The Grimaldi family of Monaco has held that country ever since the 17th Century when they arrived from Genoa Italy. Their coinage has always been patterned closely after the French, and the early pieces are now exceptionally rare. Only with the opening of the gambling casino did the Monagasse government issue money in large quantities, and oddly enough, Gold 100 and 20 Franc pieces were the most common ones.

1950 MONACO

RAINIER III, 100 Francs, as described in article.

SPECIAL, UNC..... $1.25

The Nickel 100 Francs with the portrait of Rainier III are worth the same as the French 100 Francs -- about a quarter in American money now. It is used largely as a tip in restaurants or taxicabs. Struck at the Paris mint, the Nickel coin as the head of the Prince on the obverse and on the reverse shows a charging, armored knight.

This is the personal symbol of the Grimaldi family. Above, the inscription in Latin, DEO IUVANTE, refers to Hercules, the legendary founder of Monaco. The shield and the horse's covering show the checker-board design of Monaco. This is the country's coat of arms, given to Monaco by the Kings of France in the 17th Century.

The term Monaco is derived from Monoikos, Greek for "single house," a monk's solitary cell. It is thought that a monastery once stood on the rock where now Monte Carlo, the worldly center of the tiny state, stands.

Grace Kelly is not the first American to marry a ruling Prince. A few years ago, half-American, half-Hungarian Geraldine Aponyl married the then ruling King Ahmed Zogu I of Albania. Zogu now lives quietly on Long Island and Geraldine is a good housewife. There are coins commemorating their marriage but not with her portrait.

A COIN NAMED COLUMBUS

Coin denominations have been named after types appearing on them like, for instance, the Scudo, for the shield on the coin, or the Taler for the town of Joachimsthai, where it originated. Here and there coins are named in honor of famous men, like the Bolivar of Venezuela.

The tiny Republic of El Salvador felt that no one had paid sufficient tribute to Christopher Columbus, and decided to name its chief monetary unit "colon" which is Spanish for Columbus. This was all the more remarkable since Columbus only paid it a fleeting visit after he had discovered Hispaniola.

The Republic of El Salvador--the capital city of which is San Salvador--never issued many coins and no silver dollars until 1925, if one does not count a few rare pattern issues of the 19th Century. But, in 1925, the 4th Centennial of the founding of the city of San Salvador fell due. It was then decided to issue 1,000 specimens of a silver Colon, honoring the event. The Mexico City Mint was authorized to strike such a Crown. On the obverse we see the conjoined busts of two leaders who made history in Salvador. The armored gentleman on the left is Don Juan de Alvarado, a Spanish adventurer who conquered Salvador for Spain in 1525, and founded its capital city. The portly gentleman on his right is the then-president of the Republic, A. Quinonez, who chief claim to fame lies in the issue of this rare coin, as well as a similar Gold piece.

On the reverse side we find the triangular coat of arms of El Salvador, backed by military flags. The coat of arms shows the mountain range common to all the Central American republics, and the date of Salvador's freedom from Spain, 1821. Around, there is an inscription reading "El Salvador, Central America, 1 Colon."

Originally issued in a one-thousand specimen lot, it is thought that a subsequent thousand were issued when the demand became too great to be denied.

That the coin is exceptionally scarce, however, is beyond question. It is the only coin which was named for Columbus
